To me, the only true count would be the number of ballots that were cast as some people may not vote for every position they are eligible to vote for.

Amber, not sure if we have that number from previous years.

Desirae . . . speak to Erna and Amber before responding . . . I'm not sure how accurate these are as I am going on the total # of votes cast for the Mayor's position as it appears to be the largest # to do any comparison to:

- 2006: 51,064 votes cast for mayor
- 2009: 35,741 votes cast for mayor
- 2012: 51,103 votes cast for mayor

These figures are what was presented in Wikipedia and/or CTV Regina.

Given that we have instances where particular wards are elected by acclamation, I don't see any other way to gauge the aggregate turn-out other than to use the mayoralty race.

As stated previously today, determining voter turnout is not an accurate measure as we have no real or accurate way of determining the number of eligible voters as we don't have a permanent voters' list . . . and therefore don't enumerate in advance of each election.

Amber/Erna . . . weigh in please.

Quick question:

Would you please remind me of the numbers in 2006 and 2009.

I know the 21% for 2009 but what was the actual tally of votes and the same for 2006.

Thank you.
